Their signatures on the accord oegotiated last year opened, in the words of a Berlin government nan, "a new era of normalization" for West Berlin and its two million inhabitants.

"Even our problems will be normal problems," the spokesman, Hanns Peter Herz, added. Yesterday's agreement will result in East Germany's entry into the United Nations, simultaneously with West Germany: diplomatic recognition of East Germany by the Western Allies after ·23 years of international boycott and, finally, normalization of relations between West Germany and East Germany. For the West Berliners, more less marooned 110 miles inside East Germany, the accord brings several major and many minor benefits. Starting today they will be able to drive or take trains across East Germany to and from West Germany without being subjected time-consuming controls or more serious haressments by East German frontier officials. They will also be permitted to risit East Germany on a regular basis for the first time in two decades. The visits are limited to a total of 30 days a year.

The pact was long in the making and involved, in addition to the four powers, the governments of East and West Germany and the West Berlin Senate.

When the draft accord was completed on Sept. 3, 1971, after mooths of arduous talks, East and West Germany negotiated supplements on the down-to-earth details of how to organize visits by West Berliners to East Germany and on the exchange of awkward parcels of land.

These recondary negotiations were also difficult and it took until Dec. 17 to complete them. The inclusion of the two Ger-man states in the bargaining raised East Germany's status and helped pave the way for further accords between them.

lion people. The principal prospective absentees are the Soviet Union, with 250 million population, and some of its satellites. The Russlans, who participated in conference preparations, are protesting the exclusion of East Germany under the conference's eligibility rules. The Soviete signed a broad agreement on environmental coilaboration with the United States on May 23.

Conference officials thought it etiil possible the Russians "might walk in Monday morning." but saw their absence as no great detriment to either the conference or to the Russians themselves, who will be given complete information on proceedings,

The chief conference division is not between East and West, but between the advanced and the poor nations, which tend to view environmental refinements as an economic luxury conflicting with their desires to become industrialized and prosperous.

ficially classified on the basis of receiving aid under the UN system-outnumber the industrialized nations at the conference by more than two to one.

Countering the view of environmental quality as a luxury is the contention that the developing countries would be foolish to follow the "smoke-means-tobs" path that led the advanced nations into their present environmental predicament, and that environmental quality can be "built in" to economic development without inordincte expense, Conference organizers point to the participation of the poorer countries, which only a few years back were largely oblivious to environmental problems, as heartening evidence that rich-poor accommodations—such as interna-tional environmental aid—can be worked out.

6 Subject Areas

The conference deliberations are divided into six subject areas: problems of human settlements. natural resources, pollution, national development, future international environmental organization, and public environmental education and information.

The agrada materiel-made public last April in some 500 pages of preparatory committee reports—has been criticized as not coming to grips with at least so problem areas that environmentalists consider urgent: the global "population explosion" and depletion of the earth's nonrenewable resources, such as minerals, some of which may be exhausted at present consumption rates within a generation.

While the implications of population growth for individual nations will be considered here, the basic controversial question of global population limitation has been left to a special UN conference on population scheduled

Nixon's Popularity on Rise After Meetings in Moscow

Gallup Poli

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, NJ. June 4.-A of the way Nixon is handling his nationwide survey conducted at job as President? the close of President Nixon's with the Soviet party beginning of the year: leader, Leonid Brezhnev, shows Mr. Nixon's popularity at its highest point in nearly two

A solid majority of 61 percent of U.S. citizens say they approve of the way Mr. Nixon is handling his duties. The previous measurement, taken late in March, showed 53 percent expressing approval. By way of contrast, the President's visit to China gave him only a modest—and short-lived raise in popularity. It should be borne in mind that the purposes, as well as the achievements, of the trip to China differed in important respects from those related to Mr. Nixon's trip to Russia. A popularity check taken before the President's trip to China howed 53 percent expressing ap-groval of his performance. Folowing his trip, his approval rating increased to 56 percent, but then slipped back to 53 percent. The last time the President's popularity rating was as high as it is today was in July, 1970, when 61 percent also expressed approval of his performance in office. That rating reflected favorable reaction to moves by the Nixon administration to scale down the war and withdraw troops, as well as to efforts to deal with inflation.

Low Point in 1971 . The President's highest point in popularity, 68 percent approval, was recorded in the period following his speech on his Vietnamization program in November, 1969. His low point to date, 48 percent, was recorded last June, reflecting the public's concern over the flagging economy and the continuing war in Vietnam.

The President's popularity following the meetings in Moscow is reminiscent of his sharp gains in popularity following the famous "kitchen debate" in the summer of 1959. Mr. Nixon, then Vice-President, engaged in a sharp running debate with Premier Nikita Khrushchev about capitalism and communism. This question was asked in the

Threats, Hostility Directed At Japanese in Puerto Rico

By Henry Raymont

SAN JUAN, Prerto Rico, June 4 (NYT).—Threats of reprisal against Japanese residents here over the terrorist attack in which 16 Puerto Ricans died last week in Tel Aviv have affected the Casals Festival of Puerto Rico.

Police protection has been offered to Miss Nobuko Imai, a Japanese violist in the 75-member festival orchestra at the University of Puerto Rico auditorium.

A group calling itself the Anti-Communist Action Movement continued to threaten retaliation against Japanese and Arabs here for the killings by three Jap-anese in the service of Palestinian

The police said that no incidents had been reported, although there were widespread rumors that undetonated bombs had been found in two Arab clubs and a

For Security Before Lydda

NEW YORK, June 4 (AP).— Newsweek said today that Israel pleaded with the French government for increased Air France security five days before the Lodda Airport massacre but got a cool "don't worry" from Hervé Alphand, secretary-general of the French Foreign Ministry.

It added the charge that Arah terrorists had broken a promise not to involve the French airline in Mideast hostilities.

The news magazine said in some time Israeli intelligence agents had warned that the Palestinian guerrillas were about to unleash some spectacular stroke. Two weeks ago, in light of those warnings, Asher Ben Nathan, Israel's ambassador to France, was instructed to call on Hervé Alphand at the Foreign

Official Apology

JERUSALEM, June 4 (AP) -Japan asked officially today for Israeli forgiveness for the Lydda massacre and said it would pay compensation to the victims.

Kenji Pakunaga, a special envoy from Tokyo, conveyed the apologies to Premier Golda Meir in a 45-minute meeting.

"My government is ready to do all it can to help the victims of the tragedy," Mr. Fukunaga told Mrs. Meir. He said she had responded "with gratitude for our prompt reaction."

Mr. Fukunaga said that Japan was considering representations to Arab governments such as those of Egypt and Lebanon, where official statements halled the slaughter as an Arab triumph. Two of the Japanese terrorists died in the sirport attack and the third was captured.

any Surplus U.S. Arms Said

By Robert L. Jackson

SHINGTON, June 4.— among those dealing in surplus investigators have found. U.S. arms were John Dawson-Bills, a Brilish business Shiv Kapoor, his India-born associate. Mr. Dawson-Ellis and Mr. Kapeer have been linked to the international armaments market in past deals with Egypt, Yemen and Nigeria.

$18,800 Bribes Reported

Some of the choicest U.S. items discovered on the black market were M-47 Army tanks and 155-mm howitzer cannons. Investigators found that depot employees accepted bribes as high 21 $18,000 to allow these surplus munitions to be sold in stillmarbie condition.

Mr. Dawson-Ellis and Mr. Kamor have not been linked to any bribes or bribe attempts, sources asid. These men, who operate at higher levels in the armaments market, bave no personal contact with employees at U.S. property depots, it was said.

Items are supposed to be scrapped only after they become obsolete or so badly damaged they cannot be repaired.

Government regulations specify that such surplus weapons as tanks, guns and gun mounts must be cut with acetylene torches and sold unly for their scrap volue. This process is called demilitariza-

When demilitarization is neglected or performed in a slip-shod manner, dealers can obtain weapons at hargain prices for shipment to Middle Eastern or African countries, according to officials familiar with the scheme.

U.S. Policies Subverted

Such back-door operations sub-vert U.S. weapons policies and encourage outbreaks of warfare between smaller countries, officials said.

Hyman S. Zaretzky, a Pentagon logistics expert who helps manage the property disposal pro-gram, said in an interview he was familiar with the Senate investigation because he and others were briefed by the subcommittee, Mr. Zaretsky said the U.S. military disposal system, which em-ploys 7,000 persons, is the biggest in the world, and it therefore has the most problems," He insisted that "99 percent of the time everything is done right," although "people find a way to steal or be bribed" despite controls and inspection. Thefts from depots occur periodically, but bribery and corruption are "at a minimum." he said. "There will be allegations from Congress and we will respond," he said. "But the allegations, for the most part, are unfair."

He denied that an international syndicate has been preying on-U.S. property depots despite the subcommittee's evidence linking Mr. Dawson-Ellis and Mr. Kapoor to surplus U.S. arms deals.

Advanced Tank

At U.S. installations in Europe, thousands of medium M-47 tanks have been declared surplus as they are replaced by the Army's newer, slightly heavier and more advanced M-60 tank.

Under Pentagon regulations, surplus tanks must have turreis and gun mounts removed and their front armor plating cut out before they can be sold as scrap. But the Senate investigators found widespread neglect of these regulations, especially as they ap-plied to tanks, heavy guns ond. such military spare parts as gun mounts, ranga finders and peri-

A tank that can be purchased for less than $1,000 as scrap can often be sold for $8,000 or $9,000 on the black market if it is still usable, investigators were told. 1 Los Angeles Times . .

The Kings Depart

'Crucial First Steps'

"Gad, sir." said Marcel Proust's Duc de of Wales who cut a bright swathe across a Guermantes at the turn of the century, "kings and queens, in these days, don't amount to much." The author is careful to point out that M. de Guermantes said this because he wanted to be thought broadminded and modern, and also to assume a modest air about his own friendships with royalty. For, 70-odd years ago, kings and queens amounted to a great deal. There were crowned heads from London to the Forbidden City, from the North Cape to the Cape of Good Hope, with varying degrees of authority and prestige, to be sure, but with enormous collective status.

Certainly, when Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David, first-born son of the Duke and Duchess of York, was born in 1894, few could have imagined that at his death only a handful of monarchs would still be reigning, and fewer still ruling. And fewer still could have guessed at the strange destiny of the young prince, or, for that matter, of the realm to which he was heir

The sad stories of the death of kings, of which Shakespeare wrote, include many who have died by violence, at the hands of usurpers, subjects in revolt, alien conquerors, mere assassins. Some monarchs, too, have abdicated, whether by their own will or forced by others. But of all who laid down the pomp of state, who did it voluntarily for "the woman I love," as did Edward VIII? Doubtless this drama of renunciation played its part in bringing so many thousands to St. George's Chapel, where the Duke of Windsor, for a little less than a year kingemperor, rested under the banners of the Knights of the Garter, Doubtless, too, there were some who remembered a young Prince world wearied by war.

But there must have been some, and not a few, to whom royalty represented a rock in times of fluidity, a tradition in an era seeking ever-new ways of life and thought, a centripetal force in a centrifugal world.

Royalty, at its best in these days of predominantly constitutional monarchy, is a banner with a lineage longer than the flags that fly over ships and regiments. It is a human symbol of loyalty to a land and a people. Like a flag, it demands certain ceremonies and certain attitudes of respect -but like a flag, it cannot fly in the teeth of prevailing winds. It must, if it is to have the virtually universal support which modern monarchy requires for its survival, be not only politics but above, or aside from, policles. It is men who carry the flag, and fight for it-common men, who have uncommon ideas about what the flag represents. And the flag-or the monarchcannot long contradict those ideas.

Some thought that Edward VIII might have invested royalty with qualities of positive leadership. Some believe that it was the fear of this, rather than any contradiction between his role in the Church of England and his marriage to a divorced woman, which led to his abdication. But the king may have been wiser than those who were ready to make a major issue of his retirement from the throne. He recognized that he might have won a political fight... but he also acknowledged that this would have been a defeat for the British ideal of monarchy; that it would have divided the empire whose unity he represented. For while the rationale of royalty as a symbol is still strong, the rationale of hereditary leadership by act, rather than by the fact of its existence, can no longer be sustained.

In both cases their successful adversaries feared the deposed leaders had been moving too far toward accommodation with the West.

Beria, most authoritative of the initial triumvirs who succeeded Stalin, sent secret inquirles to Boon to try and arrange a deal. This odd tentative ended with a bullet in Beria's neck.

Khrushchev was ousted after even more audacious efforts to achieve friendship with the West Pollowing his Orban humiliation, he explored new means of warming up relations with the U.S.A. after the menscing implications of the U-2 spy-plane case. And, to supplement this basic endeavor, he sent his son-in-law Adzhubel on an exploratory trip to Bonn to raise the prospect of Soviet-German friendship.

The Catalyst

It would seem that foreign affairs served as a catalyst if not an impulsion in each political demise. Therefore it is obviously worth considering whether Brezhnev, the present Soviet boss who. ignored the American olockade of Russian ships in North Vietuam, could also come a cropper.

It is not to be forgotten that already Brezhnev has carried through a rapprochement with West Germany, itself an unusually significant achievement for the U.S.S.R. which suffered so much from the Germans during World War II. The mere hint of such rapprochement with Bonn touched off political conflagrations

In elaborating his detente with West Germany and the United States, he demonstrated much skill. He subtly used France as a pawn to prompt German reaction beloful to his aims and also to weaken West E-ropean solidarity sufficiently to make Washington amenable to its own superpower dialogue.

Number One

Brezhnev has succeeded in affirming his pre-eminence as Number One and backing this posttion up with a positive foreign policy. Has he won the game? Are his views no longer challenged? Is his power fully entrenched?

As dominant boss he has probably achieved an apogee, but there is still known opposition among hardliners who disapprove of his bias toward the West. These hardliners surely include Andropov, secret police chief. Marshal Grechko, Defense Minister, and Shelest, until recently head of the Ukraine. Shelest has already been demoted to a lesser post. Are other demotions coming? Since Brezhnev failed to back those who wanted to intervene physically against Israel in 1967, the hawks have been after his scalp. First among them to go-long before Shelest was Shelepin, who pre-ceded Andropov as security chief.

There is almost always a power struggle in and around the Kremin and, oddly enough, it often involves foreign affairs. A hard line toward China means a soft line toward the West, Even Enturbelev knew that

WASHINGTON.—The "experts" bombing the Peking have it all figured out. By roads; but Mr. Brez all the rules of the game, George McGovern is going to win the Democratic Freshlential nomination in July and be trounced by Richard Nixon in the general election in November. But there are no experts and there are no reliable rules any longer, and even the grinning champions worry about their successes in the night.

Politics is now the greatest gamble of modern life-less predictable than race horses or the stock market, or even marriage. Maybe it was always so. It took Franklin Roosevelt, the Hyde. Park patrician, to introduce the welfare state into America, and Richard Nixon, the anti-Communist sonservative, to go to Moscow and Peking.

So the prophets are in trouble, and no wonder. Not so very long ago, everybody knew that John Kennedy was starting a Presidential dynasty and would be fol-lowed by Bobby and Teddy, but the accidents of life changed all that. Even Richard Nixon annonneed his retirement from polities in 1962, and here he is a decade later, presiding success fully over all the policies he once.

Surprises

And the surprises go on. Ed book favorite, has almost dropped from sight. So there is a puzzle, and not only here in America. General only here in America. General of the primeries with de Gaulle picks Pumpidou as his, a strong internitation successor in France and is destroyed by him. Harold Wilson is so confident of victory and so contemptuous of Edward Heath that he loses political power in Britain and is now so determined to prove he was right that he is in danger of losing control over his own party.

NEW YORK—The seizure of the Iraq Petroleum Co. by the Irac! and Syrian governments has the potential to become the greatest crisis in world oil since the nationalization of the Iranian off industry by Premier Mohammed Mossadegh in the early 1950s.

As one of those 934 Americans imprisoned in foreign jails for drug offenses, I would like to say, in hopes that a personal appeal might have some impact, that if placed on a scale the fleeting euphoria of drug usage would in no way equal the very real and lasting traums that may result from arrest for use of such

In many cases European drug laws are much harsber than our own and as a foreigner, if arrested, one can often expect to be jailed for up to six months before trial, without ball and whether guilty or not,

Man's Debt to Nature Must Be Paid in More Than Recycled Beer Ca

By Barry Commoner

The writer is director of the Center for the Biology of Natural Systems at Washington University. His latest book is "The Closing Circle." This article is excerpted by permission from the June issue of Harper's magazine.

United Nations is simultaneously an instrument designed to solve the problems of the world and itself an extension of these problems—an instrument flawed by its own purpose. The UN Conference on the Human Environment, to begin in Stockholm today, is an effort to escape this dilemma. It tests the hope that, confronted with a truly common problem—global survival—otherwise contentious nations might actually cooperate and win a collective victory. U Thant put it this way:

"Perhaps it is the collective menaces, arising from the world's scientific and technological strides and from their mass consequences, which will bind together nations, enhance peaceful cooperation and surmount, in the face of physical danger, the political obstacles to mankind's unity."

Jesse Unruh, the California politician, once expressed a related idea in less diplomatic language: "Ecology has become the political substitute for the word 'motherhood.' "

If the subject of the Stockholm conference was originally conceired as a kind of global "motherhood issue," it soon began to lose that status. One messy problem was the general East-Wert split in the United Nations. The U.S.S.R. and Czechoslovakia borcotted the last meeting of the conference preparatory committee because no means had been found to enable East Germany to participate; their presence at the conference is not

A Hot Potato Furthermore, the environment

it:elf turned out to be a politically hotter potato than it seemed at first. Here, for example, are a few of the major issues that have surfaced during the preparation for the conference. Whites vs. nonwhites: According to conventional wisdom (if not hard evidence), the primary reason for the environmental crisis is that the earth's human population is growing too fast for the planet's limited resources. Since environmental concerns are usually voiced by whites while the most rapidly growing populations are nonwhite, the latter may well regard the outcry as the white man's hangup: that be is-at last-

and comfortable niche in the world.

If this response is crude, some of the instigating statements are at least as crude. Consider these blunt observations on the problem by one of our leading environmentalists, Garret Hardin:

"Every day we [Americans] are a smaller minority. We are increasing at only 1 percent a year; the rest of the world increases twice as fast. By the year 2000, 1 person in 24 will be an American; in 100 years only 1 in 46 ... Those who breed faster will replace the rest . . . In the absence of breeding control a policy of 'one mouth one meal' ultimately produces one totally miserable world . . . It is unlikely that civilization and dignity can survive everywhere; but better in a few places than in none. Fortunate minorities must act as the trustees of a civilization that is threatened by uninformed good

Haves vs. have nots: Another piece of conventional wisdom attributes the environmental crisis to the heavy demands on re-sources and the environment generated by increasing per capita consumption. This leads to a similar conflict between industrialized and developing na-

Lady Barbara Ward Jackson, who has written the official background report for the Stockholm conference, told a recent Vatican meeting that although three-quarters of the world's resources have now been taken over by the third of the world population that is industrialized, this could not con-tinue indefinitely because "high consumption means high wastes," threatening environmental col-

She added: "If these results follow from the high standards of only a quarter of humanity, what might not happen to planet Earth if three-quarters sought the same levels of income?"

In response, the poor countries might say with some justice that it seems at the least graceless of the wealthy countries to cry out against increased consumption just when their poorer neighbors are heping, at last, to scramble a little way out of the abyss of poverty.

• Harmful help: A third assertion shout the origins of environmental pollution—that it is the inevitable concomitant of an power, ignoring the hard fact

WASHINGTON (WP). - The being crowded out of his secure industrialized society-deepens the developing nations' concern about the impact of the Stockhoim conference.

After all, industrialization has been their main hope for improved living standards. Since they depend on aid from the industrialized countries for most of the needed technology, they fear that, on environmental grounds, they may be deprived of such aid "for their own good."

Concrete Issues

These are not merely abstract issues. The State Department has begun to stress population control in its discussion of foreign aid. Stiffened U.S. regulations on the allowable amounts of pollutants, such as DDT in food, have already led to serious rejections of Argentine beef and other imports from developing countries - worsening their already poor trade position.

Meanwhile, at least one developing country, Brazil, has openly invited high-polluting industries to avoid expensive environmental controls at home by escaping to Brazil's still unpolluted jungles and shorelines.

The pre-conference discussions have concentrated on the technical aspects of environmental problems - monitoring and control of pollutants, planning and management of natural resources and urban settlements, educational and organizational needs. They have skirted the far more complex area in which these problems clash with the realities of economic and political systems.

For example, in 10 pages on pollution control, the conference documentation makes no mention of the one issue that, certainly in the United States, is becoming the major obstacle to the control of industrial pollution its effects on profits and employ-

Nor is there any mention of the U. S. action that has placed the most powerful constraints on further pollution—the legal requirement that government agencles produce an environmental impact statement that correctes the environmental effects of proposed programs.

Similarly, the pre-conference documentation on energy problems urges nations to limit the growth of their demand for that a good deal of this growth is due to the replacement of human labor by electric power in modern industry—a process that is largely responsible for the much-sought-for increase in industrial preductivity. As a resuit, any effort to reduce industrial power consumption runs up against a tug-of-war among the overall level of production, labor productivity (value added by industry per man-hour), and environmental policition from power generation.

Always an Impact

Since power generation is never free of some environmental impart-if only from heat emissions -there is no way to reduce pallution without cutting into industrial production, labor productivity, or both. The economic consequences of such cuitacks would, of course, be very severe. As we learn more about the intricate connections between the environment and the economic system, it becomes increasingly evident that environmental improvement is a zero-sum game; if the environment wins, someone

How deeply environmental issues are embedded in basic economic conflicts is particularly clear when they involve develop-ing nations. Take rubber pro-duction. Before World War II, rubber came from a single, natural source—the rubber tree. The rubber tree can flourish as part of a natural ecological system in the tropics. Its leaves absorb energy from the sun, which is then transferred, in an intricate series of biochemical steps, to a complex molecule in the tree sap that, upon being tapped, yields latex and, eventually, the rubber of commerce.

Thus, the energy required to essemble the rubber molecule is derived from a renewable resource the sun that rises every dayand is transferred by natural, cool, nonpolluting processes within the plant, which as a side benefit also produces oxygen. Ecologically, this is an ideal way to obtain the needed good, rubber.

It Happened

In contrast, synthetic rubber is made from petroleum or natural gas by a series of elaborate chemical reactions involving temperatures ranging up to 1,000 F. Ecologically, this is a very costly process: it consumes a nonrenewable source, and the heat needed to achieve the high process temperatures pollutes the environment with waste-combustion products.

Obviously, it makes no ecological sense to displace natural with symbolic rubber. Yet it happened-not because of the pressure of rising population or consumption but for military reasons. None of the belligerents in World War II produced natural rubber domestically, and overseas shipment became a serious military. liability. The United States and Germany hastened to produce synthetic rubber.

was given to closing the U.S. synthetic-rubber industry: The military wanted never to becaught again in the position of relying on imports of natural rubber. During the Korean war, synthetic production was sharply stimulated, doubling between 1950 and 1955. In a Cold War panic, huge stockpiles of synthetic and naturel rubber, as well as other strategic materials, were accumulated. By 1970, U.S. syntheticrubber production was nearly equal to world production of natural rubber.

The synthetic-rubber industry is part of a vast, interconnected complex of new petroleum-based industries — the petrochemicals, which include synthetic fibers. plastics, detergents, insecticides and herbicides. Add automobiles, ofi tankers, and pipelines to this list and you have a good fraction of the pollution problems of industrialized countries all emanating from petroleum. Interactions among the various parts of the petrochemical complex intensify their separate environmental effect.

The automobile is the chief driving force. By sharply increasing the auto engine's size and power, Detroit has raised engine temperatures and hence. the output of nitrogen oxides from auto exhaust the crucial ingredient in smog. Moreover, to suppress engine knock at high cylinder pressures, lead was added to the gasoline-another source of air pollution.

And as smog increased, chemical oxidants pervaded urban air, attacking rubber tires, reducing their life and increasing the demand for rubber-which was Tising anyway because the heavier, high-powered cars needed larger tires. So while it is true that we use more rubber per capita than before, it is worth remembering that much of it is consumed, uselessly, to sustain the destructive evalution of Detroit's

Another Menace

Clearly, the United States has paid a price for switching from natural to synthetic rubber. And we are not alone. Through an intricate chain of political, economic and ecological events, the development of U.S. synthetic. rubber has created severe environmental problems in Malaysia and other natural-rubber-producing countries, Between 1945 and 1950, natural rubber made a strong comeback and dominated the world market, although selling at a price as much as four times higher than through the maze ( that of systhetic rubber.

Demand for natural rubber was high partly because of U.S. stockpiling. When in 1960 the stock-pile was sold off-indeed, dumped as surplus natural rubber sales were hard hit. Because of increas- real issues are cer ing price competition from synthetic rubber, the price of natural rubber fell from 43 cents a pound in 1960 to 23 cents a pound in 1970, As a result, in Malaysia despite a 31 percent increase in natural rubber between 1950 and 1968, the total market value of the crop decreased 33 percent.

With prices plummeting, efforts were made to salvage the economic viability of Malaysian rubber holdings. To increase the labor productivity of the larga plantations, chemical pesticides more efficient strains and new tapping techniques were introduced, causing extensive unemployment. In addition, diversified rubber and oil-palm cultivation was promoted. Compared to rubber trees, oil-palm monoculture is much more vulnerable to pest infestations. In the early 1960s nervous growers responded to some minor insect pest attacks on oil palms with massive spraying of DDT and other synthetic

This triggered an ecological backlash: The insecticides killed off the insect predators that had previously kept pest populations in check; no longer under this natural control the pests multiplied explosively, producing huge infestations that nearly stripped the palm plantations bare.

Thus Malaysia, already burdened by the economic effects of. competition from one petrochemical product synthetic rubberbecame, in addition, a classic victim of the ecological onslaught of another one-DDT.

Barriers to Sanity

Obviously, a return to ecological sanity would call for the abandonment of the U.S. syntheticrubber industry and the increase of natural-rabber production in Maleysia and other habitats of the rubber tree sufficient to meet world demand.

The usual objection is that the total demand could not be met, in that way. But right now world production includes about 3 mil-Hon long tons of natural rubber and 5 million long tons of synthetic. Thus, a rough tripling of natural production would take over the total market.

And this seems quite possible. In Malaysia, half the total crop comes from large, efficient plantations that produce about 750 world's mounting but pounds an acre; the remainder is. produced by small growers, at a yield of about 340 pounds an acre. If those growers reached maximum efficiency, the total crop would be increased by about 50 percent.

Moreover, new genetic rubbertree varieties that have just begun to enter production can proacre. It seems likely that natural. rubber could supply world demand-if only economic and political interests did not stand in the way.

Here, then, are some of the economic and political conse-quences of an ecologically same return to natural rubber: essential abolition of the syntheticrubber industry in the United States and other industrialized countries; a resultant decline in demand of basic petrochemicals; the loss of at least some manufacturing industries based on rubber, such as tires to naturalrubber producing countries; the dependence of United States and other military establishments on foreign rubber. No wonder ecology has been called "the subversive science."

What such cases tell us is that environmental degradation is not simply the outcome of some general expensive process, growth of population, or the demand for goods, but of specific changes in the ways goods are produced, which are themselves governed by powerful economic and political considerations.

A Thin Skin

The foregoing are some small examples of certain very large global facts: That the earth's thin skin, which is the sole support of human society, comprises a huge network of interdependencies (the ecosphere) among the marvelous varieties of living things, between each of them and their physical and chemical surroundings, and between man and all the rest.

That since all human life and every productive activity depend on the ecosphere, any human action that destroys it is suicidal; and therefore that all human productive activities, and the economic principles that govern them, must obey these ecological imperatives.

That the solution of the environmental crists is not to be found in new kinds of automobile mufflers or in legal constraints on waste emissions but in the radical reorganization of national economies and international commerce along lines that make ecological sense.

Mr. Brandt was asked about the conference on European security and cooperation, which NATO foreign ministers were tentatively launching as he talked in his office. He viewed it less as a hrenk-through into new and dramatic fields than as "a means of keeping detente under control."

He saw the conference as giving the Communist states of East Europe "some more possibility of maneuvaring than they would otherwise have." He saw the formula for a successful conference "not to be happy with too little and not to demand so much that

Asked about political pressure to reduce U.S. forces in Europe, Mr. Erandt said, "This is something which can only he influenced to a very small degree from abroad." But he thought that the start of preliminary talks on mutual and balanced force reduction would help fend off the critics.

Mr. Brandt was clearly concerned about the nature of U.S.-European relations, and saw a need to improve the channels of communication. "I have been advocating an organized link between the enlarged (European) community and the United States," he said. Everybody agrees this a fine idea, but of his European colleagues

Big 4 Sign Berlin Pact; Brandt Accords Final

Shortly after the Soviet ambassador, Valentin Falin, deposited the ratification instruments of his government's friendship treaty with Bonn, Mr. Gromyko flew to the West German capital for a talk with Foreign Minister Waltor Scheel and supper with Chancellor Willy Brandt.

Polish-Bonn Relations

At about the same time, Poland's deputy foreign minister, Jozef Czyrck, completed in Bonn his government's ratification of the 1970 West German-Polish friendship treaty. He declared that the two countries were taking up diplomatic relations immediately. This opens an era of normalization between the two governments after two decades marked largely by hostility.

Both the Moscow and Warsaw treaties were prime works of the Brandt-Scheel coalition government's Ostpolitik, or Eastern policy, opened when they took office

While the Poles, Russians and West Germans were toasting each other in Bonn, Secretary Rogers led a small American automobile convoy into East Berlin as a "symbolic and legal" exercise of four-power rights in the capital of East Germany. Mr. Rogers got the idea for the 70-minute visit inte Friday night.

No doubt Britain will adopt her usual attitude to anything new in Europe.

A formidable team of 43 speakers has been assembled to look at marketing and advertising in the new Europe.

With an Empire to occupy her, Britain in the past hasn't been too concerned with developments on the other side of the Channel. And today, even though we've lost our Empire, many British companies still don't let their gaze stray far beyond the white cliffs

Starting with a speech by The Prime Minister, followed by detailed analyses from Lord Mancroft, Lord Harlech, Sir John Davis of Rank, Professor Asa Briggs, Ronald Halstead of Beechams, Jeremy Bullmore of J. Walter Thompson and Elizabeth Nel And this despite the fact that in under 10 months we'll be part of the enlarged HEC.

Most notably, the rush to subscribe to convertible bonds paying 4 1/4 percent interest and carrying a 15 percent conversion premium overlooks the fact that better terms are available among some older bonds. The Carrier 65, for example, are trading around 113 and yielding 4.8 percent to maturity. In addition, the bonds are convertible into Carrier common stock at a premium of a mere 25 percent. Suez 78 ara also yielding 4.8 percent to maturity and can be converted at a premium of 7.9 per-

Profit-Taking, Uncertainty Over the Economy Send N.Y. Stock Prices Into Mild Retreat

By Thomas E. Mullaney

NEW YORK, June 4 (NYT) --Perhaps it was merely a normal bout of profit-taking after the stock market's sharp, contra-seasonal ascent during the first four weeks of May.

Or, it might have been a sign developing disenchantment with the glamour issues over their ability to pile further price gains atop their recent steep advance. It could, instead, have been a reflection of the series of vague, undefined fears gripping investors about various economic, political and international problems. Or, perhaps some members of the investing community were beginning to agree with the statement reiterated a week ago hy William McChesney Martin jr., former chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, that the market's turnover and price volatility this

Maybe it was a combination of all of those factors, but whatever the reason or reasons, the stock market staged a short retreat last week in a pervasive display of uncertainty. Not even the completion of the summit meeting in Moscow and President Nixon's confident recitation before a joint session of Congress of its accomplishments could stem the market's downward course. Yet, at the weekend, optimism remained high in Wall Street that, before long, the market would return to an upgrade to mount a new attack on its historic peaks. Confidence in a "traditional" summer rally is widespread because the fundamental forces-in both the economy and in business-are still heavily constructive.

There were, to be sure, some negative developments in the background economic and political news last week, but none was ahares, sufficient to offset the continuing favorable news or to start a decisive downturn in the stock mar-

Among the adverse elements in the news were these: The new surge of 3 percent in form prices and the fresh rise of 0.6 percent in over-all wholesale prices last month, the continuance of unemployment at a 5.9 percent rate

npsweep of the free gold price toward the $60-an-ounce level; the lingering concern over the Vietnam war, the shock over the terrorist attack at the Tel Aviv airport, and the nationalization of the Iraq Petroleum Company. Countering these developments were the continued strength of

By Elizabeth M. Fowler

NEW YORK, June 4 (NYT).-The big stories of the week on the American Stock Exchange did not involve the trend of the market as much as two individual companies. One dropped sharply, the other jumped up. Meanwhile, the ASE index closed at 27.85. down 6.09.

Guardian Industries, in the auto glass husiness, has been a favorite growth stock in recent months, but last week Guardian shares plunged 26 1/2 points to 103. The reason was no further away than some analysis' pessimistic opinions about the continued fast growth of the company's profits expressed in a leading financial newspaper. Despite a protest by the company's president that the article was based partly on a "misconception," investors sold

At the same time a leading company, Chesebrough Pond's, was announcing that it planned to acquire Binney & Smith, in the art materials field. It was a well-kept secret because the day before the announcement the shares of Binney & Smith on the American Stock Exchange gained only 1/4 of a point.

The next day there was a sharp rise, and with reason. Chesebrough said the acquisition involved a share-for-share exchange since Chesebrough's shares sold at around 76 at the time. Binney & Smith shares selling in the 30s promptly rose. At week's end Binney & Smith shares showed a gain of 19 5/8 to close at 56 1,4.

Vesely, maker of camp trailers, lost 4 5:8 points during the week to end at 12 3.4, because of a discouraging earnings projection.

Another low-priced stock, American Israeli Paper, which traded at 6 3.4 a week ego, closed at 9 5.8, almost a 50 percent gain. The company, which has a half ownership in a company that is licensed to manufacture the Wankel engine, could give no explanation for the sharp rise. There has been much interest in the Wankel engine for cars and boats.

In the Over-the-Counter market, the trend was similar. The NASDAQ industrial index ended at 143.35 down 0.79 for the week.

Changes were mostly minor for banks and insurance company

ing, as well as the further rise in the number of Americans holding jobs to a record of 81.4 million last month While the stock market's near-term outlook remains largely favorable, there is rising concern in investment circles over future po-analysts indicated an overwhelming consensus that the market would make further gains before undergoing any major correction.

In the bond market, prices rose and long-term interest rates dropped to their lowest levels since mid-January, chiefly because no one-from the federal government on down-has been borrowing as much as generally expected, even though the economy has been showing more signs snap and sparkle.

Pessimistic analysts of the credit markets view the borrowing slowdown as a lull before a pickup later in the year that will drive interest rates back up. In the meantime, though, rates on both long-term corporate bonds and municipal issues have come down significantly from the year's

Yields on high-grade ntility bonds moved down to the 7.25 percent level last Thursday with the sale of a $50 million issue of the Florida Power Corp., bonds maturing in 2002. With the decline in rate, investors did not rush in to buy the bonds. Bot underwriters insisted they

The shares, trading near $150, yield less than 1. percent a year through the annual dividend (on which Europeans pay a withholding (ax), But the 6 percent band is yielding 3.7 percent to maturity (tax free) and is convertible, as of July 1, at $120 a share. This of course accounts for the fact that each $1,000 face value bond is trading at $1,250. But with no conversion premium and a higher income than from the common stock, the bonds certainly appear more attractive than the shares-or the new bonds on offer. This apparent inattention to the bargains available in the secondary market is chalked up to the small commissions that banks and brokers make there relative to those from retailing new bond issues or selling stocks.

Amateur Title In British Golf

SANDWICH, England, June 4 (AP),-Trevor Homer, a 28-year-old English businessman who hadn't won a major tournament. defeated 43-year-old Alan Thirlwell, 4 and 3, yesterday in a scheduled 36-hole final match for the British Amateur golf championship.

Homer was 1-up after 18 holes on the 6,333-yard, per-70 Royal St. George's course with its many deep sandtraps and undulating fairways.

He virtually wrapped up the title with an eagle, hirdie, birdie, starting at the 25th hole.

It was the first time since 1965 two English players had contest-ed the final. Thirlwell was the runner-up in 1958. Friday, he had beateo the last of 43 U.S. competitors, Kemp Richardson, at the 20th hoic, then went on to upset the favorite, Mike Bonallack of Britain, in the semifinals.

Homer shot eagles on the 490yard seveoth hole twice yesterday. He rolled in a 20-foot putt for his eagle in the morning round and canned one from 36 feet in the afternoon.

Homer was one-under par for the morning round. He strotched his lead to two holes at the 19th. Ho followed up his second eagle with a 2 iron shot for a birdio two at the 26th. Then he saok a 25-foot putt for another hirdle at

By Alan Truscott

On the diagramed deal South could hardly stop short of slam when his partner opened one notrump and then showed spade support. He used Blackwood to cover the remote possibility that two aces were missing.

The slam depends primarily on finding a favorable trump situation, with East holding the queen once or twice guarded. With any lead but a diamond South would have coasted home by drawing trumps and developing the club

But West led the diamond eight. South put up dummy's queen without much hope, and won the trick with the ace when East produced the king. A favorable trump situation was no longer enough, for there was a probable loser in each miror

South found an elegant solution-a partial elimination. He led to the spade are and followed with a trump to his king, noting with pleasure the appearance of the queen and ten from East, He then cashed three heart tricks, depriving East of a safe exit, and led his diamond loser, East won in this position:

Once when he wandered into the house where Forster Bennett and a friend were being friendly over a bottle of wine, he noticed that they tried to keep their glaster out of sight below the level of the table. Were they ashamed? Were they ashamed only before him or were they making a gesture they thought he would appreciate? It can be seen in big things too. In a matter involving the piping of fresh water into his home, his host acted with a responsibility and determination not characteristic of his other actions. Water was surely an important matter, but Mr. Crapanzano felt that the Indian was living up to an ideal more meaningful to his guest than to himself. The place is in northeastern Arizona, not far from Flagstaff. It is a plain. unadorned document, vivid, concrete, accessible. The facts are: his; the conclusions are likely to be your own. Forster Bennett (his name, like so many others, Rod Quinn, Willy Murphy, Dermot Lewis, sounds deractinated) is a Navaho in his 50s who is raising a family of girls and boys without benefit of a wife, though he has been married by his own admission at least three times. He doesn't earn much, but he works steadily. His credit at the finance loan company is good.

The Marriage Evil

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON-Attacking marriage is the big new thing in publishing this year, and why not? The evil of marriage may be a timeworn theme but at least it beats the thresome old generation gap. So far, however, most of the writers doing the attacking seem short on qualifications. Either they have never been married at all or, if they have, their marriages have been brief and onhap-

Dy.

It is easy to see why editors use the material of such poorly qualified authorities. Single people and victims of marital disaster tend, thorities. as a class, to be short-tempered and irascible, at least when compared to the veteran of marriage. Short-tempered and irascible prose makes for punchier, more exciting journalism than the serene cadences likely to flow from the pen of a wife or husband of several years standing.

Indeed, the thoroughly married person is unlikely to produce any prose at all. The night he intends to create some prose for the editor too often turns out to be the night when it is his turn to do the dishes. If not, it is a very good bet that the other partner to the marriage will suggest that he come slong to a movie instead of wasting an evening composing another piece of journalism about the evils of

This, in fact—this constant diversion from great work—is one of the graver evils of marriage which marriage's single and divorced assallants rarely mention, understandably; only those long married will have experienced it. If you are, say, a wife who longs to compose the definitive attack on every aspect of marriage, you will find barriers constantly placed across the path to glory. "Instead of attacking marriage at the typewriter tonight," your husband will say. let's open a bottle of Château Latour and let dinner pass slow-

How hard it is to resist. The wine, of course, will take the barking tone out of your prose, and the editor, who needs a literary style that sits on a stretched nerve like a crosscut saw, will be disappointed. Such argument persuades few husbands. "Of course, I am destroying yoo as a creative person," he will in most cases agree. "And you are destroying me as an individual in search of my own mysterious but ineffably delightful Self. That, according to unmarried and divorced marriage authorities, is one of the fonl consequences of marriage. Single and divorced persons are not vulnerable to distractions of this sort, as they are fond of boasting in their writings. Being hlessedly unmarried, they are free to give irascibility a full venting—ah, editors' delight! unimpeded by companionship in the suffering human condition.

This is why we have so few attacks on marriage by those who have truly suffered its dreadful effects for 10, 20, 30 years or There is a devastating case to be made against mar-riage, but finding time to assemble the case is not easy if you are married,

There is always something more pressing to be done. The fullness and complexity of relationships between married persons would be beyond belief to the young. When we are young, as the marriage critics tell us, we think there will be love for evermore. June-moon love. Weepy love. Hot love. Suffering love. Honest, open, true, romp-through-the-daisies, hlue-sky-filled-with-cumulus-cloud love, all so honest, honest, honest ...

If there were, for evermore, it would be like never growing, and no matter what you do, it's al-most impossible to keep people from growing. Growing. Growing and changing. Two people growing, as in a marriage, are constantly becoming two new people, and new people are al-ways pressing on yoo, making demands, requiring attention, consideration, thought, worry. Oh, it's terribly complicated, marriage! And life should be simple, shouldn't it?

Soviet Press Campaigns Against 'Soccer Hippies'

By Hedrick Smith

MOSCOW, June 4 (NYT).—A sports fan in the Ukraine was so indignant he could hardly bear to watch television. A Leningrad student was disgusted. A Moscow school. teacher pleaded for help from moviemakers. The newspaper Sovetsky Sport insisted that referees blow the whistle at once.

The problem: Long hair, sloppy socks, dirty slacks or rumpled jeans and generally hippie fashions not only among ordinary Soviet youths but also among some of its most vaunted soccer stars during nationally televised games.

By Western standards, both the dimensions of the problem and the length of hair seem modest. But with the coming of summer, the Soviet press seems determined to try to check the trend.

Sovetsky Sport, a national dally, was so upset because of recent events that it called for a crackdown on "soccer hipples." In a column Thursday entitled "Snobs on the Soccer Fleid," it ticked off the names of several top Soviet players, accusing them of being "pitiful imitations" of Western stars.

In another newspaper, Sovetskaya Kultura, N. Morozova, school teacher in P.S. 288 in Moscow, complained that movie makers were not doing their bit to deter Soviet youths from copying hippie styles.

"Take the so-called 'volosativi' hairy ones," she wrote, "Untidy guys—bushy hair, decorated with chains and trinkets, long unwashed and uncombed, a disgusting sight. Where are the films exposing these fashionable types, or making fun Instead, she complained, movies were providing poor guides for children because even the socialist heroes drank too much, smoked too much, and used too much slang. In Komsomolskaya Pravda, a youth newspaper, Vladimir

Orlov, a 20-year-old worker going to night school at Leningrad University, protested the appearance of "imitation hipples" and asserted that this was not a private affair but an affront to Soviet morality. Such attacks rarely appear in the controlled Soviet press unless they have official blessing from some higher anthority.

"My friend says, if this man wants to wear such things, let him, don't interfere with the self-expression of personality," Mr. Orlov wrote. "But I don't think there is any personality here. It's a poor man's imitation of everything he's seen in foreign films and magazines. Nothing else. Such an untidy fellow by his very appearance on a crowded street challenges the sense of beauty in human nature and the norms and rules of our society."

Nonetheless, he said, he was rejecting the solution adopted under Czar Peter I of cutting off beards, or the drastic tactics of civilian police auxiliaries a few years ago of snipping off the arms and legs of bright shirts and tronsers to shame their wearers. Mr. Orlov advocated "not reprisals but tactful advice" to reform the wayward.

Regarding the soccer "slobs," Sovetsky Sport advised the Soviet players not to copy the long-hair, socks-down style of Northern Ireland's famous George Best or West Germany's Gerd Müller, but to imitate their skillful footwork and hall control instead. It quoted a letter from a Ukrainlan worker who said his pleasure at the Soviet soccer victory over the French was spoiled by the fact that "several times, our halfback Veremeyev was shown running with his socks down." "And if you add that some of our soccer players and the Cartoon in Moscow magazine ridicules long hair.

French players had hair as long as women's manes, believe me, I wanted to turn cff the TV." the fan wrote, Sovetsky Sport accused the Moscow Spartak's former cap-tain, Valery Logofet, as well as other players on Spartak, the Kiev Dynamos, Bako Oilers, Alma Ata Locomotives, the Rostov-on-Don army team and other clubs of setting bad examples for Soviet routh.
